

REVIEW

BLURBS

SHE'S A JOLLY
GOOD FELLOW

By Sajita Nair;
Hachette, Rs 250

It's raining chic-lit novels based on life in the Army. After Penguin's Where Girls Dare, one of the launch titles of its new imprint, MetroReads, comes this book. Unfortunately, the rather attractive packaging doesn't guarantee good content. Plod your way through the story of second lieutenants Deepa Shekhar and Anjali Sharma as they take on the male bastion in the same year that Aishwarya Rai and Sushmita Sen sashayed their way to victory in international beauty pageants. Packed with clichés from the start, this novel is a wasted effort by Sajita Nair, who, like her characters, was commissioned in the Army in 1994. Wonder why women can't write about women in the Army as individuals rather than anomalies?

You & YOU

*Use your mind,
heart, discipline
and emotion to correct yourself*

PAULO
COELHO

